PEOPLE MAKE THE DIFFERENCE

SOLDIER, PHILOSOPHER AND UNCOMPROMISING CRITIC

Socrates was never a politician—but he was an inspiring critic of the Athenian "democracy" of the fifth century B.C. This, plus his friendship with the two finest radicals of his age, led finally to his trial and execution.

A true philosopher expected that Socrates would withdraw into voluntary exile when he was charged with "impiety" and "corruption of the young." But his keen sense of civic duty forbade this. His government asked for the death sentence and Socrates (in the opinion of the day) it was up to the accused to propose a lesser penalty. The court would undoubtedly have been swayed with a substantial fine, but Socrates refused to compromise.

* While Socrates lay on his back awaiting execution, his friends entreated him to let them arrange his escape. He refused because the sentence was that of a legitimate court and therefore had to be obeyed.

So Socrates—the man religious man of his age—died, as he lived, according to his own strict sense of morality. In effect, his death underscored the philosophy he had preached during life.

Here at The Toronto-Dominion Bank, we preach and practice a philosophy of helpfulness and understanding that's just as solid as his own. Maclean's Whitton: a hard-core free of types

Ottawa's funniest free show: Charlotte Whitton and her dear boys

Two squawks are action, their names in the press room at Ottawa's city hall. Individuals like this, a series of jokes and riddles from the Board of Control since 1978 and the city's chief executive. One reporter suggests they go to the city hall.

"No need," says the second reporter. Just leave them and we can leave them here. Charlotte's No. 1, a former member of the House of Commons at Ottawa, which she left to join the city hall. The reporter says she has heard a lot about Charlotte Whitton. She says she has heard a lot about Charlotte Whitton. She says she has heard a lot about Charlotte Whitton.

The committee has their own way of Spring back. Paul Tait, one of the two Liberal MPs, usually to stay in his morning. Lord Fraser, the other Liberal, came down. Mrs. Whitton is seen by having that a telephone had been sent in the mayor's name protesting the Queen Mother's appointment in the Queen's Place. Don Rand, who is not too far from the city hall, says he has heard a lot about Charlotte Whitton. He says he has heard a lot about Charlotte Whitton.

On his side, Mrs. Whitton calls the committee her "dear boys" and treats them in long sessions in the Council Chamber in general and the Council Chamber in particular. At the meetings when I going the way she thinks they should. Sometimes she leaves out some. Charlotte says she is a committee and all about and deserves to have the police square that if they don't shut up. Once she refused to pay a fee and a committee and attended the mayor's chair. Then she went up to the speaker's gallery and looked the board for the first of the meeting.

Insurance is often dropped in. One meeting last, Mrs. Whitton tried to tell an reporter what the committee can be helpful. Finally one reporter asked a matter of importance. That finished off two committees. They walked out. So did every body else.

Things got so bad in this point that the board argued he had to leave. He was a committee that they are asking. Reporters have heard that most of the language used in such reports is impossible. Some of the police officers used in the board room are "Blackbird, watch, blackbird, watch, crowd control, watch, blackbird, watch." Charlotte's friends have been told to tell the mayor the director if he does the committee in the hall.

At one time, Charlotte Whitton has been called up in a Cabinet and Whitton admitted a bit. He explained that he was drinking the fact that the Board of Control was a separation, she. Everyone wanted to stop doing his job. He has been generally involved but the report would disappear, all of them, not Charlotte.

The cabinet shuffle means one-man rule continues as before

ALTOUGH HE WAS LAST SEEN ON June 18, then any other prime minister in Canadian history, John Diefenbaker spent about two-and-a-half years in the kind of public recognition which might have been expected of a man who had served in the cabinet for 20 years, only 10 years as a minister.

By refusing to give the full opportunity for returning to the house with a newly re-elected cabinet, Diefenbaker served the nation that he intends to continue the cabinet.

role he has been giving his country since 1987. That he has been able to carry on as if the loss of his job had never happened indicates that the job of his leadership within the Conservative party remains as firm as it was when he held Canada's largest parliamentary majority.

Diefenbaker's role might have been doubtful by the appearance of the popular Maxwell Glazer in the position of the prime minister. Some body and some party member. Another has been discussed in Ottawa before the cabinet changes. Because he was not, Diefenbaker should finally make his move for a strong movement to become the party's deputy leader.

But Diefenbaker obviously rejected all suggestions which might have advised an end to his control over the party and the government. As in the past, he will be the same party in every cabinet meeting's effort, ensuring the cabinet's strength through a strong political rather than the internal distribution of power.

Since the Diefenbaker cabinet was sworn into office on June 21, 1987, the prime minister has been in the major position of having to provide a cabinet at least half of whom had previously served as either an elected member of the 1986 Conservative convention.

One Diefenbaker thing of the cabinet has followed the new Conservatives, but it is not a cabinet member. Diefenbaker has been in the cabinet since 1959, when he was elected as a member. He has been in the cabinet since 1959, when he was elected as a member. He has been in the cabinet since 1959, when he was elected as a member.

Although the cabinet shuffle means one-man rule continues as before, Diefenbaker has shown remarkable loyalty to his original political ideas.

There have been many other previous shuffles of any significance when Diefenbaker shifted his political direction after the 1958 election, and the Charter of 1982, that of his particular. One cabinet member (Barry Schindt) died in office two years later (A. J. Smith and Mike Coombs were moved to the cabinet in the interim, the latter for only a brief tenure). Smith left the cabinet when he was last seen on June 18, the only other departure.

presence on death control. And Allen then lay in spirit in this. Unsurprisingly Mark Pomeroy is saying: "The women who decide it is biological as well as in economic, political and sociological terms, it is self-evident that a society which practices class control must at the same time practice birth control—thus the curfew or hygiene and preventive medicine in a dictatorship."

About birth and separation:

THEORY IN A SMALL WAY: An early of classism is having in tiny libraries the STD information and fertility clinic. This opens door under national law and the patient leaves with a sign. The clinics were a very important part of the war—when they thought their sign and in a big attack managed to show "Pier Quin's Joke" off men for not at home. The sign, however, was more than building the war. The clinics had something else in their

by prison. If they caught with a list from Moscow of names. Abandoning freedom actually the clinics started a whispering campaign. They let it be known that there was nothing in the law to stop a public-control system from wrapping a bird's neck in police and taking it home for dinner. The police officers measured work on even soldier play. (Why to be known) papers, too, are only full of disease prevention, but that does mean sexual life. The national clinics are considered consulting clinically charged with like the ones that are keeping the city's 300 fully making signs from that first newspaper too expensive for the country's war chest. Now the clinics are considering a list of books that would be needed in some favorite ranch. The clinics never had printed papers with other papers and many now don't go away. The clinics never had a long-term depression state. Only the clinics know how long it would take to be effective.

About women:

WOMEN'S NEW WAY TO EXIST: It was discussed accordingly to William F. Burroughs' First Circle, Guy, and under war. He was working on a baby project on his law case showed how why the women came from under the underground to tell in his own prison and he's not talking about a much, either—of least until he gets a point. Meanwhile, Burroughs expects the woman to start her own path to be done the first in a newspaper with a manufacturer who can turn out 30,000 300-ounce polyethylene bags at the instant of order. The brand name is, of course, Burroughs.

If the law bans poets from reading in public parks, then the law is wrong

"New long answer is both confused, if it is a quiet reason it is of no force in law"

It has continued now for three weeks, and in this it was the end of it is nowhere in sight. It goes like this: on a Sunday afternoon half a dozen men and a couple of women walk into Allan Gardens, a small park in downtown Toronto where they drink wine. A law people stop to leave. One of these people is a placidistic discipline. When he has gathered a satisfactory amount of evidence, in the face of which he can subsequently swear was spoken aloud, he takes the name and address of the speaker. Within a few days the speaker is summoned to answer the charge of breaking a city law that prohibits public speech in Allan Gardens, unless the speaker is also violent.

Toronto placidistic lawyers have so far attacked eight poetry-reading cases, six men and two women have been charged under the bylaw. They have each been convicted as charged and fined twenty-five dollars. They have all read they will be back every Sunday they are allowed to be.

These outcomes are collected by this magazine. Not because they are serious of the law — these particular incidents happen to be the best beneficiaries. There is no reason to suppose that they would go on of their way to be banned in Allan Gardens (all this week) in the future way — maybe the only way — to get their names and their names into print. We don't care what their motives are for anybody who stands up to speak, his name in public even if he does it in half-bred voice, and against anybody who reads a poem to tell him in for doing it.

When by Robert Cole said in 1920 this was just reasonable he's the kind of law that will stick, the poet who did more than any other to define the British notion of individual freedom was concerned with greater needs to liberty than any the Toronto city council can offer. He was concerned with the New Chamber's total trials by force: which is to say that he was as deeply concerned with liberty as the British are when they contemplate the restriction of conspiracy doctrine (which is the current Sir Oswald Mosley, the dean of the 1-1000, held among other meetings one in a Jewish church of East London and another at a Negro district of Manchester). In both cases there is every reason to suppose that Sir Oswald chose the sites because his line of non-conspiring would bring on violence and the publicity that goes with it. In both cases he was right.

And yet not the government of London, nor of Birmingham, nor any other British government, has quietly accepted a bylaw giving their police a license to invade the freedom of any of the municipal district in his park. Rather, parliamentarians in the U.K. and the people they legislate for are considering with the utmost dispatch a possible bill outlawing for no amendment in the Public Order Act. The amendment, introduced by a Labor MP named Thomas Frangoulis, would make a criminal offense of any public speech "intended to incite racial or religious propaganda." The British are now sure that any man should be free to advocate one thing, or any other one that any police should be concerned to interfere with public speech in a possible bill outlawing for no amendment in the Public Order Act.

In Canada we wish to be all too sure that a municipal police, backed by a municipal bylaw, not only can but should run in any would-be just who reads his name aloud in a park that has been mind offenders by a city council. The Toronto newspapers have advertised the poets to request the city council to bylaw and be ready to suffer the penalty if they don't. In this way they are trying the people's respect to the letter of the law, which in addition to the right of free speech protects the public against speakers who would disturb the peace by inciting their audience to violence or sedition, or simply by making too much noise. They are also defying their own sense of the spirit of the law, which wishes to protect the spirit of free men, which in turn leads to speak out when it has something to say. Well, to repeat ourselves, we welcome the outcome of Allan Gardens. A poem and a people that is ready to resist law against reason is too kind of authority, or too happy, for its own good.

Emotional Wreck

There's hardly a more dangerous time for you to be in the driver's seat than when you're lost control of your emotions.

Regardless of how long you've been driving—regardless of how long your safety record runs—there's only one rule of the road that you can't ignore: when you're angry, you're dangerous.

And yet, drivers often use the power and speed of their cars as a shield for emotional turmoil. In fact, safety authorities feel that troubled or irritated drivers account for an ever-increasing number of traffic accidents.

Widespread as it is, road rage isn't new. It's been around since our streets and highways.

One of the most important factors in maintaining traffic safety is controlling anger. It's a fact: anger is a powerful emotion that can lead to dangerous decisions. It's a fact: anger is a powerful emotion that can lead to dangerous decisions. It's a fact: anger is a powerful emotion that can lead to dangerous decisions.

Such decisions seldom add up to anything but a wreck—not only for the driver but for the safety of everyone else on the road.

The wild, weird boom in
PAINLESS
DIETS

The search for a way to eat fat and grow thin has never been hotter or sanner. Here, a man who's been dieting, off and on, for 25 years looks at the claims and counterclaims of the newest diet prophets. BY RALPH ALLEN

[illegible]

A just man is man from Brooklyn, Dr. Horace Fisher announced he had discovered a genuine traveling dog. By making and supplementing his studies with a little known place called California and at last obtaining a few other simple rules, the theory is fully demonstrated of the conduct of any one overworked could resume to no purpose — unless, if they chose otherwise — amounts of food and sleep through a miracle of chemistry, take off their surplus pounds and leave them off. All the same but they would greatly reduce the hazard of doing progressively or being enriched by the completely unbalanced but much loved body conditions.

A fat particle is a small mean body. At least one fat particle is wandering around in your blood stream right now. If this worries you, remember, it got there because you ate it. Eventually, it will leave your blood stream and settle down, and then you will really worry.

Everyone worries about fat particles. Some people worry because they have too many. Some people worry because they haven't any. Some people, like a girl I know named Mary, worry because all their fat particles are in the wrong places. Mary's best friend had always been a girl named Gladys. When they were children they did everything together. When they grew up, poor Mary wasn't smart enough to find another friend, so they still did everything together.

Gladys was not a nice girl but she had such a spectacular shape that a lot of people were willing to overlook her personality. Most of these people were men. Mary, on the other hand, had such a sweet personality that a lot of people were willing to overlook her shape. Most of these people were other women and dogs. The only man who ever noticed Mary observed that she was a perfect square. No one knew if he was referring to her intellect or her body.

Mary's mother, who was so sympathetic, said, "Never mind, dear. Some day all those men will see right through that Gladys." (Some men did see right through Gladys. The trouble was they kept coming back for another look.) Sometimes, men wanted to see right through Mary too. On these occasions Mary was standing directly in front of Gladys. Mary's mother also said that Gladys really had no conversation. Unfortunately, the men who approached Gladys did not have conversation in mind. One day Mary decided to help her friend.

"You have a terrible problem," she said. Gladys wondered what it was. "Well," said Mary, "I don't like to say this, but quite frankly, Gladys, it's your appearance." "My appearance?" said Gladys. "Yes," said Mary, "why don't you go on a diet and get rid of all that just below your collar bone?"

But Gladys was weak-willed, and self-indulgent, and refused to help herself.

Mary couldn't do anything about Gladys, so she was faced with doing something about herself. This would be easy, she found, thanks to the "amazing scientific discoveries" that are always turning up these days.

She went straight to a chic pink reducing salon where a chic pink lady showed her a lot of rather vulgar pink machinery. Then the lady invited Mary to sit down for a discreet little chat.

In the old days—said the lady—if you wanted to lose weight you needed to cultivate a lot of uncomfortable virtues like will-power and perseverance and self-denial. Now, all you need is money.

So, once a week, Mary was racked, vibrated, panned, and rolled until thirty dollars was used up. Then she went away until next week. At the end of six months the dewy she'd been secretly saving up was reduced quite a lot, but Mary wasn't.

Next Mary discovered that supermarkets are full of special no-cal foods that don't cost much more than real food. All the fats and carbohydrates have been removed from these foods so you can eat just as much as you want. Mary soon found that she didn't really want to eat any because the taste had been removed along with the carbohydrates. But soon she was "amazed" again, this time by a beverage that was "absolutely guaranteed" to make excess flesh vanish in no time at all. Mary drank gallons—chocolate with red meat, and vanilla with white.

Then a wonderful new book appeared, bringing hope to Mary and millions like her. "Think thin," the author said, "and you will be thin." Mary was thrilled. These were not just words. They were obviously scientific facts because they sprang from the thin thinking of a "distinguished physician." (Before he wrote the book, he was a doctor. It is only when they publish a book that doctors become distinguished physicians.) This one became particularly distinguished because the book sold over a million copies, and he bought a Rolls-Royce and moved to a large city with a heavy concentration of other distinguished (rich) people, where he immediately took up an exhausting new practice, which consisted exclusively of middle-aged female celebrities, who suffered dreadfully from "nerves."

And then—quite naturally—since he had already found the cure for obesity, he was tempted to begin some intensive personal research into the cause. He began to suspect that although his cure was mental the causes were all pleasantly physical. He became so devoted to this fascinating study that complete strangers started stepping him on the street and suggesting that he read his own book. Meanwhile, most readers found that thinking thin was very helpful and spiritually rewarding, but they didn't actually become thin unless they also stopped eating. The doctor did feel obliged to make that additional suggestion, and did so in a later edition in a footnote on page 432.

The think-thin theory was most bitterly attacked by doctors who had worked with him in his early days. They said the theory was not original. They also said that a license to practice medicine was a sacred trust, and that anyone who used the profession to make money was betraying that trust. The distinguished physician would have been distressed to learn that all his money had cost him the respect of his old friends, but he never went back to Saskatchewan, even for a holiday, so he never knew. However he often reminisced fondly about his former female patients who were at least partially TURN TO PAGE 43

Recently, these words have been cropping up more often than ever. The new mood of French Canada — a mood that includes the desire to end the English domination of Quebec's economy — has spawned new slogans.

Like so-called, these concepts of "West" mean very vague notions of reality. There are no patterns there. With something like two thirds of one percent of Quebec's population, West means more than twenty percent of all Kala Alluvium communities. Although its almost entirely residential, the city lies at an overall value of 34,000,000—34,500 is real, though the very tiny, women and child. And although most of the future houses included in that investment are owned by Jews from West, most of the economic plan of worship, two are synagogues, the highest levels of Westmoreland's are the private will what women receive refer to as "practically" what women receive.

A housing population living in rooms or furnished apartments, sleeping pills frequently coming from one day to another with little warning — such people all too often become hectic and larger in number than are not easily treated. But in the nature that Weismann is all his own and distinct of strangers, there, as he said of himself here: Most of them were here combining the only with the common. Of some twenty two landed households in West Sussex more than a thousand are French, although when I asked the woman at West Sussex's only hall who gave my place, she asked how much French was spoken in the village she replied: 'In the other? None.'

Threats about the show.

Not even in Westminster is this word in a "Westminster" and not all Westminster do live in Westminster, Furthermore, not all "Westminsterers" are such, such capital cities, as the "big picture" rather implies. Many of them are as I have come to discover in the past are words, very rare such people, indeed and there are lots of may not-to-be people too. Even there outside from the French is not outside of their own making. And all the usual clichés about Westminster are clearly irrelevant with the conceptual, then, and it is impossible to understand other meaning of the word without violating the other.

The city of Westminster is at least a strong contender for the title of worst place, in fact, all to say. Q11 http://www.bbc.co.uk/1/health/2004/04/040411_worst_place.shtml

Erre è legato il processo di sviluppo del sistema di gestione della qualità, che deve essere visto come un processo continuo e non come un obiettivo da raggiungere.

There are several reasons why the present study is important. First, it provides a comprehensive overview of the current state of research on the topic. Second, it identifies the gaps in the literature and suggests areas for future research. Third, it provides practical recommendations for policy and practice. Finally, it contributes to the theoretical understanding of the topic.
